Fluid Planet

About 70% of Planet Earth is covered with water. But don't be fooled - the quantity and quality of our most precious resource is far from guaranteed. As populations increase and new demands emerge, maintaining and developing water supplies will be an ongoing challenge. Scientists are looking carefully at the impacts of climate change and human activities on watersheds. From the Rio Grande Basin Initiative to suburban rain gardens and the mountain snowpack, learn how researchers and educators are joining forces to answer critical questions about the lifeblood of our planet: water. Monday February 3 at 3:30 pm
