DESCRIPTION:

The facade of this stuccoed Spanish Colonial Revival residence consists of four sections. Two stories in height, the south three sections constitute the primary volume while a one story, shed roofed wing on the north forms an arched porte cochere. A tiled hip roof tops the two story wing. In the center, a deep arch contains the entry. Above it, a balcony with turned wood columns has been enclosed. Another arch, at the left (south) of the facade is glazed. Windows are predominantly casement in type; two small windows next to the entry are protected with iron grilles. On the north, the second story overhangs the first, with arched corbelling marking the transition. No other alterations besides the balcony were noted, although shrubbery does cover a portion of the house.
