Science Goes To The Movies

Science Goes to the Movies looks at the science in contemporary motion pictures. Top working scientists review popular movies, resulting in lively and informative conversations about what science is happening now, what science is heading us towards in the future, and what's just fun fiction. James Hanken joins the show to talk about animal behavior as it's depicted, and not depicted, in the animated Walt Disney film Zootopia (July 9). Columbia University's Director of Adolescent Medicine, Dr. Karen Soren discusses Spiderman and many teenagers' not-so-secret desire to be a superhero (July 16). Academy Award winning filmmaker Alex Gibney and director of the Earth Institute at Columbia University, Jeffrey Sachs, talk about Wall Street economics as seen in recent blockbusters (July 23). And finally, neuroscientist Dr. Phillip Kennedy discusses real-world applications of biomechanics (July 30). Mondays at 3:30 pm
